Now Booking! Menéalo: Latinx Music & Life

The co-hosts of the popular Latinx music podcast, Radio Menea, are heading out on tour to bring their lively queer Latinx feminist discussion of the music you love to your campus or community.

Verónica Bayetti Flores and Miriam Zoila Pérez, accomplished activists, writers and speakers, will present an entertaining discussion about Latinx music and its relationship to identity, queerness, immigration and politics. Called “the woke Latinx music podcast you should be listening to” by Remezcla and “the soundtrack to a queer mami’s sancocho” by Latina Magazine, Radio Menea is an entertaining bilingual journey through the Latinx music that is the soundtrack to Vero and Pérez’s lives, and probably yours too.

During these unique events, they will share some of the Latinx music they love and talk about how that music has shaped their lives, and how our world and its politics--race, class, gender and more--shape the music.

RADIO MENEA on tour!

Miriam Zoila Pérez is a queer Cuban-American writer and activist with a low-key bachata obsession. Pérez writes mostly about topics at the intersection of race, health and gender. She's a columnist at Colorlines and the founder of Radical Doula and she's spoken at over 60 colleges and universities. Follow Pérez on twitter @miriamzperez.

Verónica Bayetti Flores is a queer Venezuelan writer, rabble-rouser, and music lover. She's got a soft spot for mujeres and queers in the underground making music and killing the game. She's been lucky enough to interview a few of them too: Xenia Rubinos, La Yegros, Li Saumet of Bomba Estéreo, La Santa Cecilia, and Ana Tijoux have been a few of her favorites. She's also spent a lot of time advocating for reproductive justice, immigrants' rights, LGBTQ liberation, and the end of discriminatory policing practices. Follow her on twitter @veroconplatanos.
